APPEARANCE AND PERSONALITY

Paul Langlois was an automotive mechanic in Quebec City when the war broke out. Although his separatist father was against the war, Paul considered himself "his own man" and joined the army. Regardless of what his father thought, he believed that fighting the Nazis was a just cause.

Paul belonged to the Royal 22e Régiment (known to English Canadians as the "Van Doos") where he rose to the rank of sergeant. It was in action around Casa Berardi, in the fight for The Gully, that he became the first French Canadian Talent. A grenade went off near him, stunning him and making his ears ring. Unconsciously, Paul rose up and sent electricity arching at the German who threw the grenade. The German fell, unconscious, and Paul's befuddlement cleared instantly.

The Canadian Army is heavily English speaking. In spite of the valour of the Van Doos (the first Canadian Victoria Cross in Italy would go to Langlois' commander), Paul sees discrimination, particularly from the older officers. Paul is determined to prove -- as the only French Canadian member so far of the Talent Platoon -- that Quebecois are at least the equal of Anglos.

PORTRAIT

NOTES

Paul can send loudly sizzling bolts of lightning at opponents. The opponent takes twice the width in Shock damage to the head (regardless of the hit location targeted). Paul must be angry for this to work.

Paul can also regenerate Shock points. He can turn this power on at any time with a dice roll. He does not regain Shock until he hits someone with his lightning attack. When that happens, at a cost of 1 Will, Paul loses all Shock damage. This Regeneration power fails if injured, when it has to be reactivated.
